(1) The clearing of tropical forests across the Earth has been occurring on a large scale basis for many centuries. This process, known as deforestation, involves the cutting down, burning and damaging of forests. The loss of tropical rain forests is more profound than merely destruction of beautiful areas. If the current rate of deforestation continues, the world's rain forests will vanish within 100 years-causing unknown effects on global climate and eliminating the majority of plant and animal species on the planet.

(2) Deforestation occurs in many ways. Most of the clearing is done for agricultural purposes: grazing cattle and planting crops. Poor farmers chop down a small area and burn the tree trunks-a process called Slash and Burn agriculture. Intensive or modern agriculture occurs on a much larger scale, sometimes deforesting several square miles at a time. Large cattle pastures often replace rain forests to grow beef for the world market.

(3) Commercial logging is another common form of deforestation: cutting trees for sale as timber or pulp. Logging can occur selectively where only the economically valuable species are cut, or by clearcutting where all the trees are cut. Commercial logging uses heavy machinery, such as bulldozers, road graders and log skidders, to remove cut trees and build roads, which is just as damaging to a forest overall as the chainsaws are to the individual trees.

(4) The causes of deforestation are very complex. A competitive global economy drives the need for money in economically challenged tropical countries. At the national level, governments sell logging concessions to raise money for projects, to pay international debt or to develop industry. For example, Brazil had an international debt of $159 billion, on which it must make payments each year. The logging companies seek to harvest the forest and make profit from the sales of pulp and valuable hardwoods such as mahogany.

(5) Deforestation by a peasant farmer is often done to raise crops for self-subsistence, and is driven by the basic human need for food. Most tropical countries are very poor by U.S. standards, and farming is a basic way of life for a large part of the population. In Brazil, for example, the average annual earnings per person is $5400, compared to $26,980 per person in the United States (World Bank,2008). In Bolivia, which holds part of the Amazon rain forest, the average earnings per person is $800. Farmers in these countries do not have money to buy necessities and must raise crops for food.

(6) Humans bear the responsibility for deforestation and the global ecological crisis. But humankind has the ability and potential to change its ways. Humans will probably turn the situation around and the lost forests will be regenerated. The benefits will be many. Trees will help protect the land from the rising seas and further erosion. Biodiversity will be safeguarded, and endangered species will have better chances for survival. Water and air quality will improve. Human health will also benefit from medicinal compounds that are given a chance to be discovered.
